Public Service Commission,

Recently I visited some relatives at Lake Cumberland and noticed that Cumberland Cellular Partnership had cut down a bunch of old big trees in order to erect a cell phone tower. Why did they do that when there is so much cleared land already available? Why are they permitted to build those things so close to the houses? This one looks to be maybe 50 feet from some homes. It's like having a cell tower in your back yard. What about the diminished value of the homes and property that surround the tower? Has the PSC considered that and who is going to compensate the property owners for their losses?
